

I am concerned about the shift of classifying broadband service from a utility to a less regulated framework because of the impact it will have on Net Neutrality.

There is no evidence that Net Neutrality by classifying broadband service as a utility has hindered investment in new broadband infrastructure or innovation in the industry. I Urge the FCC to abandon its effort to reclassify broadband service as this will be bad for consumers. It will hinder free speech and free commerce. Broadband is more of a core utility today than basic phone service.
